

Census 2011

Shaping your future

Have you filled in your census form yet?

Over 75 per cent of Scots have already returned their forms and census takers are set to visit those who have yet to send back the questionnaires, to make sure everyone is counted.

The census takers will be able to explain census questions, offer advice, arrange translations and can provide replacement questionnaires or other help.

You must fill in and return your census questionnaire as soon as possible to avoid the risk of a £1,000 fine. Scotland's Census asks people to fill in details of their household circumstances on 27 March 2011.

Everyone must be counted because the census results are used to inform how billions of pounds worth of services are targeted and delivered - services which matter to us all such as health and housing, and business investment.

Your personal information is protected by law and kept confidential for 100 years by the Registrar General.
